BUGS BUNNY'S Merry Christmas

TWEETY'S FUN FLIGHT

Does a toad fly? Of course not, but a dragonfly flies! Tweety's game is fast and furious fun that will have your friends saying that a house flies, when we all know a house doesn't fly; but a housefly does fly. To play, sit in a circle while one of the group calls out the names of things that fly—or don't fly. To confuse the players, the leader "flies" by waving his arms while holding his hands on his shoulders each time he calls a new name. The players must "fly" only if the name called is something that really flies. Mistaken "fliers" are eliminated until only one is left. Then he becomes the new leader. Quail, robin, rooster, chicken, crow, pigeon, bee, termite, catbird, housefly, horsefly, and pelican are some of the fliers. While house, dodo bird, horse, rocket, bullet, daisy, marigold, donkey, cat, whale, and anything else you can think of to add to the fun are non-fliers!

SNOWBIRD IMPRESSIONS

If you live where it snows, you'll enjoy covering your lawn with Tweety's snowbird impressions. To make them, lie flat in the snow and spread your arms out straight. Then move your arms up and down in a flying motion to make the wings. Next fashion the tail by moving your legs back and forth to push away the snow. Tweety's snowbird impressions will keep you company for a long time—at least until the next thaw.

Sniffles' TIE and RIBBON RACK

Let three of your favorite friends, Mary Jane, Sniffles, and Santa Claus help you keep your ties or hair ribbons straight and neat! You will need three empty thread spools, cardboard, glue, carbon paper, and crayons. First, trace the outline of the rack onto cardboard and cut out. Color the border and the bow on top your favorite color. Then trace the three faces on cardboard, color, and cut out. Now, glue the spools in place on the rack and then glue the faces to the opposite sides of the spools. Using cellulose tape, hang Sniffles' rack on the end of your dresser to keep your ties or ribbons handy. Use this pattern to make Christmas gifts for your friends.

Take turns playing Beep Beep and Wile E. Coyote. Cut a small arrow from cardboard and thumbtack it to the compass center to spin for moves. Using different colored buttons to represent each character, follow the directions where you land after each spin. You can pass each other on the road, or even occupy the same space, but the first player to spin the exact number to reach the "home base space," wins the road race.
